International Investment Law and the Rule of Law

Peter-Tobias Stoll*

Table of Contents

A. The Emergence of International Investment Law........................................269
B. International Investment Law: Challenge, Contestation and Reform....270
C. International Investment Law and the Rule of Law..............................276
   I. The Obvious: Investment Law to Promote the Rule of Law........276
      1. Legalization and Judicialization for International Peace and Security ...........................................................................276
      2. Strengthening the Role of Law by Empowering the Individual...277
      3. Strengthening the Rule of Law at Domestic Level?.................278
      4. Development Dimensions of International Investment Law.......279
   II. Less Obvious: How the Rule of Law Informs International Investment Law ........................................................................280
       1. Legal Certainty ......................................................................281
       2. Consistency of the Law .........................................................282
       3. Legitimacy ...........................................................................283
   III. International and Domestic Rule of Law: United or Conflicting?....283
       1. International Investor-State Dispute Settlement and Domestic Adjudication – Local Remedies ..............................283
       2. Is Arbitration a Legitimate Way to Adjudicate Issues Relating to the Exercise of Public Authority?.........................286
       3. Discrimination ......................................................................287
       4. An Utopian Proposal: Establishing a Global Human Right to Property ..................................................................289

* Dr. Peter-Tobias Stoll, Professor for Public Law and International Law at the University of Göttingen, Director, Institute for International Law and European Law and Jean Monnet Chair for European Union and Global Sustainable Development through Law.

doi: 10.3249/1868-1581-9-1-stoll
Abstract

International investment law appeals to a lawyer’s appetite for the rule of law by disciplining the exercise of power between States and foreign investors through legalization and judicialization. Originally supposed to serve as a fix to promote foreign investments in developing countries in times of legal uncertainties, now, thousands of bilateral investment agreements exist, and the number of cases in investment arbitration has exploded in the last decade. Further, there is a tendency of generalization, as investment protection now features as a standard element of international trade agreements, far beyond the original focus on developing countries. A number of flaws and shortcomings of the rules and procedures became apparent in the course of the more frequent use of the system and resulted in much discussion within the expert community, which resulted in some changes. Furthermore, the long neglected possibility became apparent, that investment claims could be directed against industrialized countries and that the conduct of their authorities could be subjected to review by international arbitration tribunals. This sparked heated public debates, particularly so in the EU. These two developments have in common, that they implicitly as well as explicitly raised the issue of the rule of law. This paper will assess the system of international investment law as it stands, its critique and its reform, through the lens of the rule of law. It will also make a highly idealistic proposal on the further development of international investment protection. In concluding, it will reflect on the proper use of the rule of law in legal analysis, by setting out the different perspectives in which the term may be employed, and the methodological consequences.
A. The Emergence of International Investment Law

From the very beginning, international law contained rules on the treatment of aliens and their property, and recognised a right of the home States of such individuals to exercise diplomatic protection. The modern treaty-based international investment law stands for an updated continuation of this practice. The most significant updates to international investment law in modern times are the detailed rules on expropriation and compensation payments, as well as direct procedural capacity of foreign investors on the international level. International investment law in the modern sense emerged as a reaction to various events that occurred in the first half of the twentieth century. Calvo, a diplomat and scholar of quite some influence, particularly in Latin America, pleaded that foreign investors should be treated equally to domestic investors under domestic law, rather than enjoying a separate international law standard of treatment. Much more radically, a strong movement in the United Nations and particularly so in the General Assembly called for a sort of absolute sovereignty, including full independence to regulate economic activities, in an attempt to establish a New International Economic Order, which was meant to bring justice to developing countries after the end of colonialism. These contestations went beyond academic debate and diplomatic activity. They also encouraged countries to legislate and to act accordingly in practice. A number of expropriations and the ongoing debates severely affected the investment climate and the actual flows of foreign direct investments, which were urgently needed to promote economic development.

In this situation, the two pillars of contemporary international investment law were established. First, the contested customary international law standards were seconded by treaty-based standards incorporated in bilateral agreements, which also gave some more detail in order to respond to the needs of modern investment realities. As is well known, the first of these bilateral investment

\[1\] For more detailed information on historical origins of International Investment Law see A. Newcombe & L. Paradell, Law and Practice of Investment Treaties: Standards and Treatment (2009), 3–18.

\[3\] See GA Res. 3201 (S-VI), UN Doc A/Res/S–6/3201, 1 May 1974.

\[4\] For instance, the large-scale nationalization in Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic following the Revolution in 1917; in Mexico in 1917 following the Agrarian Reform; furthermore, the nationalization of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company in 1951 in Iran and the nationalization of the Universal Suez Maritime Canal by Egypt in 1956.
agreements was concluded between Germany and Pakistan in 1958. As on today, more than 3000 of such agreements have been concluded, and over time further developed to embrace more standards and rules for the pre-investment stage.\(^5\)

Secondly, a forum for investor-State arbitration was set up in the framework of the World Bank. The International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID) and its establishing agreement\(^6\) provide for investor-State arbitration, drawing from established rules and practices in international commercial arbitration. The procedure furnishes the investor with an international legal remedy (Art. 1 of the Agreement) and consequently forecloses the investor home State from exercising diplomatic protection (Art. 27). Furthermore, in general, the procedure is detached from domestic remedies as it does not require the exhaustion of local remedies (Art. 26). On the other hand and in order to secure its effectiveness, the awards of ICSID arbitration enjoy an exceptionally strong enforcement, see Articles Art. 53 (1), Art. 54 (1).

B. International Investment Law: Challenge, Contestation and Reform

This combination of treaty-based substantial standards of protection and the unique arbitration procedure has proven to be quite successful over the years, as the growing numbers of bilateral investment treaties [BITs] and the increasing caseload in investment arbitration may signify.\(^7\) This extensive practice revealed certain weaknesses of the system, which gave rise to far-reaching criticism and demonstrated a need for reform in detail. This reform of international investment law is currently under way. Three strands of discourse and development can be seen, which took place at different times and levels, and were interconnected.

A first line of development took place in the 1990s, and responded to the increasing caseload in investment arbitration. With investment arbitration becoming a frequently used and standard element of international economic law, the relatively few cases, which involved manifest flaws and errors became significant in number and called for action. While in accordance with the very character and purpose of arbitration, the awards are final (Art. 53(1)), the provisions of the ICSID Convention on annulment of awards (Art. 51 and 52) were extensively interpreted in order to allow for a correction of the award in exceptional cases of manifest error.\(^8\) The extensive interpretation of the annulment provisions developed in actual procedures, and was seconded by the wider investment law community. Today, it is a widely accepted and established practice, that an annulment procedure can take place for a number of reasons and many observers agree, that in terms of functionality, this move goes into the direction of an appellate procedure.\(^9\) Also, the increasing caseload and the relatively small group of arbitrators preferred by parties resulted in cases of doubts as to their impartiality and independence. A code of conduct was elaborated and adopted to address this problem.\(^10\) Lastly, in responding to criticism against the former confidentiality of the procedure, transparency became an issue and a practice developed to make available awards as well as submissions of parties to the public. Recently, hearings were also streamed.\(^11\) A more systematic approach to transparency is now pursued with the Mauritius Convention.\(^12\)

\(^6\) Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes between States and Nationals of Other States, 18 March 1965, 575 UNTS 159 [ICSID Convention].

However, this reform of investment law did not only address its procedural parts, but also substance. From 1990 onwards, in a second move, a more general trend to mainstream sustainable development, environmental protection, human rights and labour standards into international economic regulations emerged, which was promoted by the public, by NGOs and a number of governments. Soon, international investment law came into the focus of such developments and these aspects were taken into account in arbitrations in view of the legitimate policy space to be afforded to host States. Even more significantly, chapters and articles on sustainable development, environmental protection, human rights and labour standards became a standard element of recent investment agreements and model agreements around the world.

---

\(^8\) CDC Group plc v. Republic of Seychelles, Decision on Annulment, ICSID Case No. ARB/02/14, 29 June 2005, para. 36.

A third line of criticism and development concerns the interrelationship between international investment law and domestic legal systems. It marks a departure in the way, international investment law has been looked at thus far.

16 Marvin Roy Feldman Karpa v. United Mexican States, Award, ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/99/1, 16 December 2002, para. 103; Técnicas Medioambientales Tecmed, S.A. v. United Mexican States, Award, ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/00/2, 29 May 2003, para. 121.

Whereas so far, international investment law and its developments were driven by an international law perspective, now domestic constitutional aspects became key. In this perspective, the potential interference of international investment law with the proper domestic system of the exercise and control of public authority by way of legislation, administration and judicial review came to the forefront.\(^\text{18}\)

This latter kind of a criticism came up as the consequence of a paradigm change, which will very likely change the landscape of investment protection in the years to come.\(^\text{19}\) Investment law originally was intended to protect investors from the North in their operations in developing countries, while not significantly affecting industrialized countries themselves. While bilateral investment treaties were drafted so as to oblige all sides to afford protection on equal terms, this protection was hardly expected to materialise. It was understood, that it would be the countries in the North, which would export capital and benefit from investment protection. The possibility, that the developing parties to the agreements could turn into capital exporters, as in reality happened later with countries such as India and China was hardly taken into account.\(^\text{20}\) Also, in Western industrialized countries the view prevailed, that protection under the domestic legal order was superior to investment law standards and that accordingly, international investment law would not be relevant.\(^\text{21}\) As claims initiated against Canada and Germany indicate\(^\text{22}\), this \(^\text{19}\) See generally on international investment law’s “shifting paradigm” S. Hindelang & M. Krajewski (eds), _Shifting Paradigms in International Investment Law_ (2016).

---

\(^\text{22}\) Canada has been subject to investment arbitration claims especially under NAFTA, see i.e. _S.D. Myers Inc v. Government of Canada_, UNCITRAL Final Award, 30 December 2002; the most prominent case against Germany in recent times related to the country’s nuclear energy phase-out, see _Vattenfall AB and others v. Federal Republic of Germany_, ICSID Case No. ARB/12/12, pending at the time of writing.
expectation did not withstand a reality test. Investors took advantage of investor-State dispute settlement in a number of cases and arbitration panels on occasion found measures failing to meet minimum standards of protection. This raised a sometimes heated debate in some countries, which particularly put into question the legitimacy of the system as such and investor-State dispute settlement more specifically.23

This debate came at a time, when new actors, approaches and formats emerged in the international investment system, pointing in different directions. First, there has been a tendency to expand the system. A number of newly capital-exporting States such as China became active, concluded a number of treaties and this way mutated from being rule takers to rule exporters.24 In 2008, the Lisbon treaty furnished the EU with an exclusive competence in the field of “foreign direct investment” as part of its commercial policy powers.25 This came in time for the EU to engage in the negotiation and conclusion of a large number of new and innovative trade agreements, for instance with the US, Canada, Singapore, Vietnam and others, which include investment chapters as a standard.26 In contrast to earlier practice, where investment rules were 23 Best coined as the “backlash” against international investment arbitration, see M. Waibel et al. (eds), The Backlash Against Investment Arbitration: Perceptions and Reality (2010).

mainly agreed upon with developing countries, this tendency, in the sense of a generalization saw investment protection as a standard element of international economic relations.\textsuperscript{27}

At the same time, international investment law is under challenge. A number of States in Latin America and Africa did drop out of the system, are considering doing so or are engaged in developing alternative means.\textsuperscript{28} At the same time, the system is severely criticised by sections of the public in the EU and elsewhere.\textsuperscript{29}

To comfort these trends, investment treaty language nowadays accommodates the need to clarify major standards used and explicitly acknowledges a right to regulate.\textsuperscript{30} Furthermore and in response to criticism as to the legitimacy of dispute settlement through arbitration and its predictability, the EU has proposed, and in some cases has already agreed upon, a replacement of arbitration by a two-tier investment court system, including an appeals procedure. Actually, efforts are being made to develop this into a Multilateral Investment Court.

\textsuperscript{27} Stoll & Holterhus, \textit{supra} note 21, 342-343.

C. International Investment Law and the Rule of Law

Protecting foreign investors against measures of a host State appeals to the lawyers’ senses for the rule of law. And indeed, in various forms to be seen in detail, international investment law can be seen as promoting it. However, also the critiques of this particular area of international law might point to the rule of law in calling for reforms. As will be seen, however, the full implications of looking at international investment law through the lens of the rule of law only become apparent, where a proper line is drawn between the international and domestic dimensions of the rule of law.

I. The Obvious: Investment Law to Promote the Rule of Law

1. Legalization and Judicialization for International Peace and Security

First of all, the development of international investment law can be seen as an important achievement for the international rule of law. Both, the legalization of investment protection by BITs and investor-State dispute settlement (ISDS) – seen as judicialization – put rules and procedures in place, where power play and uncertainty reigned before.

To fully appreciate the relevance of this, it should be recalled, that one of the basic tenets of the development of modern international law is to promote peace... through the development of international rules and the establishment of means for the peaceful settlement of disputes. Given the number of State-to-State disputes concerning the treatment of foreign investors in the past, amounting the use of force even in some cases, the establishment of international investment law surely is an achievement. This is so, because investment disputes are settled through legal means. Further, in engaging the investor and the host State, investor-State dispute settlement prevents or better still, excludes a potentially difficult confrontation with the investor home State. This is because Art. 27 ICSID Convention explicitly prevents an investor home State from exercising diplomatic protection.

2. Strengthening the Role of Law by Empowering the Individual

Another obvious and impressive effect of international investment law is that it enables an individual to stand up against a State. As has been rightly observed, investor-State dispute settlement is one of the few areas, where international law, which in general is for States, stretches out to an individual. In this regard, it comes close to the logic of human rights. Indeed, human rights are often and rightly considered a core element of an international rule of law and the same is certainly true for investment law in this perspective.

It has to be highlighted, that this marks a departure in the understanding of the rule of law. The traditional core of the rule of law is to establish rules,

---

55 On the violent history of foreign investment protection see for example Miles, supra note 20, 19-121.

58 See for example Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 10 December 1948, UN Doc A/ RES/3/217 A, Preamble, para. 3: “Whereas it is essential, if man is not to be compelled to have recourse, as a last resort, to rebellion against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by the rule of law”; UN Human Rights Council, Human Rights, Democracy and the Rule of Law, UN Doc. A/HRC/RES/19/36, 19 April 2012, para. 16 (d)-(j). procedures and institutions, where power play prevailed.\textsuperscript{39} The point at issue here is, that it is not just rules, procedures and institutions, but their content that counts as well.\textsuperscript{40} The protection and respect for individuals as provided for by international investment law can be seen to reflect such a substantial dimension of the rule of law. By including such dimensions, the rule of law can be said to embody fundamental values.

3. Strengthening the Rule of Law at Domestic Level?

As is often observed, international investment law may promote the rule of law at the domestic level.\textsuperscript{41} This is certainly true in that investment law standards of treatment relate to the conduct of public authorities within the domestic legal order of host States. However, it is worthwhile to look at this effect in some more detail and to contextualize it.

In a detailed perspective, first, this effect very likely depends on the level of the rule of law existing in the host country at hand. Indeed, where the reputation and stability of a legal system, including legislation, administration and jurisprudence are in question, the effect of international investment law may be substantial. However, where a stable and reliable legal system already exists, the effects of international investment law may be largely affirmative only, or minimal, or – as we will see later – even problematic.

Secondly, the extent and scope to which international investment law informs domestic legal systems is worth considering. This becomes particularly clear, if international investment law is seen in context with human rights law. Both come close in that they assign rights and legal protection to individuals and discipline States to that end. However, they differ in how this is to be achieved. Human rights law is much concerned with direct effect, proper implementation and access to justice and strives for being effective on the ground and to inform domestic legal systems to this end. Of course, international investment law may also produce a persuasive effect in view of domestic legal reform. In the sense of a spill-over effect, the related effects may well go beyond benefitting foreign investors and produce advantages also for national individuals and businesses. However, international investment law is much less explicit than human rights law at this point and hardly reflects a similar intention in view of the domestic legal order. Probably, the reason for this relates to the purposes of investment law. It is destined to specifically protect foreigners and relies on international dispute settlement.

\textsuperscript{40} Ibid.

4. Development Dimensions of International Investment Law

In connection to its contribution to the rule of law, international investment law is often said to be about development. Indeed, the history, ambitions and real world effects of investment protection largely support this claim. It has been no accident, that the World Bank initiated the establishment of ICSID as a hub for investor-State-dispute settlement in times of serious uncertainties about the legal security of investors under international law. The facilitation of foreign direct investments has been seen as a necessary component of the Bank’s mandate to promote economic development and as an essential complement to its own lending activities. And indeed, with some caveats as to a proper quantification, the emerging international investment law system and ICSID as a core part of it have a substantial part in the promotion of foreign direct investment flows around the world.

Even more, international investment law explicitly addresses the development concern in order to make sure, that protection is only afforded to those investments, which in a way contribute to the economic development in the host State. The point at issue in this regard is the term investment, which is

---

46 Salini Costruttori S.P.A. and Italstrade S.P.A. v. Kingdom of Morocco, Decision on Jurisdiction, ICSID Case No. ARB/00/4, 23 July 2001, para. 52; Joy Mining Machinery Limited v. The Arab Republic of Egypt, Award on Jurisdiction, ICSID Case No. ARB/03/11, an essential precondition for protection in terms of substantial standards as well as of investor-State dispute settlement.\textsuperscript{47}

However, improving legal security and protection to facilitate investment is just one way to see international investment law, the rule of law and development connected. Another way to look at it can build on the understanding that development builds on the rule of law and to ask, how international investment law can directly contribute in this way. Indeed, more recent economic research\textsuperscript{48} and not least the writings of\textit{Amartya Sen} have revealed, that the rule of law is a pertinent and critical element and driver of economic and social development.\textsuperscript{49} From this point of view, however, the contribution of international investment law is likely to be less impressive for the reasons explained above in regard to the impact on the domestic legal order. While some spillover effects can be expected to the benefit of domestic individuals and business operators, international investment law by and large is focused on securing the rights and interests of foreign investors only.

II. Less Obvious: How the Rule of Law Informs International Investment Law

Asking for contributions of international investment law to the international rule of law is the obvious way to approach the relationship between the two. Yet, the opposite perspective is worth considering as well and arguably increasingly plays its role. This increasing relevance of the rule of law as a guiding principle in the development and practice in international investment law is more apparent, than it would appear at first glance.

\begin{footnotesize}
\footnotesize
\begin{itemize}
\item 6 August 2004, para. 53; \textit{Malicorp Limited v. The Arab Republic of Egypt}, Award, ICSID Case No. ARB/08/18, 7 February 2011, para. 113.
\end{itemize}
\end{footnotesize}
1. Legal Certainty

An obvious first example for this is the issue of legal certainty. As has been seen, international investment law has been criticised for the rather general language of its substantive rules and the failure of investment arbitration to clarify those terms in a reliable way.\(^{50}\) Foreseeability and predictability of the law and dispute settlement concern legal clarity and legal security, both of which belong to the core elements of legal certainty and the rule of law concept. A number of recent developments in international investment law address these points. The many efforts to clarify the concepts of indirect expropriation and fair and equitable treatment in recent bilateral investment treaties and in the investment chapters of trade agreements must be mentioned here.\(^{51}\) Also and ultimately, the efforts to establish an international investment court are based on these grounds.\(^{52}\)

A similar development concerns the earlier lack of means to correct errors in fact or law in arbitration, which was remedied by the extensive use of the annulment procedure and now shall be addressed by an appeals procedure, which is part of the concept of an international investment court.\(^{53}\)

---

50 Dolzer & Schreuer, supra note 9, 35.
2. Consistency of the Law

Next to legal clarity, consistency is an issue at hand. In recent years, the interrelationship between investment law and other parts of international law, such as environmental law, sustainable development more generally, human rights and labour standards has been intensively discussed and have been addressed in recent case law as well as in recently concluded BITs. Such questions of interrelationship between diverse regimes in international law have been the subject of a larger debate on the fragmentation of international law. While that debate did not arrive at a complete understanding about the necessary coherence between such regimes and the norms which call for unity, if nevertheless became clear, that inconsistencies between different parts of international law put into question legal clarity and potentially also the idea of the consistency of law. Both these principles form part of a more general understanding of the rule of law. At least in cases of a manifest inconsistency such as coverage for investments, whose operation conflicts with human rights or labour standards, the rule of law can be said to be at stake.

58 Ibid., paras. 420, 465.

3. Legitimacy

Lastly legitimacy may be said to be related to the rule of law. It plays a major role in the recently raised doubts as to the appropriateness of settling investment disputes by arbitration. Arbitration is a perfectly legitimate means of settling international commercial disputes between private parties, who agree to do so. However, and as has been increasingly made clear in recent years, arbitrators chosen by parties might fail to meet legitimacy criteria appropriate to dispute settlement, where complaints of individuals against the exercise of public authority are at stake.

III. International and Domestic Rule of Law: United or Conflicting?

In the above assessment of the impact of international investment law on the rule of law, a distinction has been made between international and domestic levels. The need to draw such a line is not evident at first glance. Historically, the rule of law emerged at domestic level and it took a while until the concept was transferred to the international level. As a result, quite a number of concepts from the national sphere were transferred to international levels and many of the concepts indeed can be said to exist in parallel. One might even discuss, whether such parallels reflect in part a conceptual unity between the two levels. However, such similarity of concepts does not at once imply harmony in the actual working of the rule of law at international and domestic levels. Indeed, it is submitted here, that clearly separating international and domestic levels of the rule of law is not only useful for conceptual analysis but probably even more essential, when looking at how the rule of law is implemented at these levels.

1. International Investor-State Dispute Settlement and Domestic Adjudication – Local Remedies

Indeed, a particularly clear line of conflict exists where international investor-State dispute settlement meets with domestic jurisdictions and adjudication by domestic courts. As has been seen, investor-State dispute settlement can be seen as a contribution to or an emanation of the international rule of law. At the same time and in domestic perspective, the rule of law can be seen to call for the adjudication of such cases through domestic courts. This potential conflict is a core issue in international investment law and its developments. It has been a major issue in the critics against international investment law and forms the main argument underlying the Calvo doctrine. Furthermore, it has caused extensive discussion on the role of the exhaustion of local remedies has been at issue in a number of arbitrations, is addressed by specific provisions in some recent agreements and very recently has driven the proposal for the establishment of an investment court.

The potential for conflict arises because domestic legal systems are equipped with their own proper dispute settlement systems, which are charged to see disputes arising within the respective jurisdiction exclusively. Such claim to exclusive adjudication rests on sovereignty and the rule of law principle, which essentially calls for institutions and procedures to be in place to allow individuals to challenge measures of public authority and to claim compensation.

---

63 In this vein for example G. van Harten, Investment Treaty Arbitration and Public Law (2007), 153-158.
66 For example, on the relationship of the protection against expropriation and prior adjudication on the matter by a domestic court, see Waste Management Inc v. United Mexican States, ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/00/3, Award, 30 April 2004, paras. 174-175; see further A. van Aaken, ‘Primary and Secondary Remedies in International Investment Law and National State Liability’, in S. W. Schill (ed.), International Investment Law and Comparative Public Law (2010), 721, 735-739.
67 See for example CETA, supra note 10, Art. 8.31 (2) which stipulates that the Investment Tribunal has no jurisdiction to determine the legality of the measure in question under domestic law, importantly including EU law, and that domestic law shall be dealt with as a matter of fact, following the prevailing interpretation given by domestic courts or authorities.
69 See for example on German constitutional law Stoll, Holterhus & Gött, supra note 18, 151-154.
In a similar way, the European Union claims the autonomy of its legal order, as a number of judgments of the Court of Justice of the European Union [CJEU] have indicated. This particular type of autonomy is primarily understood to entail that EU rules are exclusively interpreted by the EU courts and the CJEU in particular. As is hoped, this might reduce the probability of a conflict, where investment law dispute settlement confines itself to adjudicating potential violations of investment protection standards defined by international agreement, without taking into account EU laws. It is to date an open question, however, whether this kind of a distinction is feasible.

The relevance of such conflict can scarcely be denied by referring to a State’s power to deliberately subject itself to international adjudication. Indeed, under their constitutional law, States have and do exercise this power in various ways and importantly also in the case of regional human rights courts. Just as is true for investor-State dispute settlement, human rights courts as, for instance, the European Court of Human Rights [ECHR] can hear individual complaints and adjudicate them with binding force for the respective States Parties, even including claims for compensation. However, such adjudication differs considerably from the situation in investor-State dispute settlement. The ECHR procedure fully accommodates the interest of States Parties by means of requiring the exhaustion of local remedies before initiating procedures. This comparison indeed is telling in view of a design of international investment dispute settlement, which may prevent a clash between the exercise of the rule of 73 Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, 4 November 1950, Art. 35 (1), ETS 5, 8 [ECHR].

law at international and domestic levels. Indeed, a number of possibilities exist to secure that local remedies are exhausted in a way to accommodate a State’s interest in seeing disputes being settled by its proper own adjudication before bringing them to an international body.74

2. Is Arbitration a Legitimate Way to Adjudicate Issues Relating to the Exercise of Public Authority?

Next to allowing for local remedies in the first place, human rights courts differ from investor-State dispute settlement in that they are designed as courts, whose judges are appointed by the States Parties and perform a specifically defined office as international judges.75 In contrast, investor-State dispute settlement is performed in the way of an arbitration, where arbitrators are chosen by parties to a dispute and the third and chairing arbitrator in a panel is chosen by its fellow arbitrators.76 This differs considerably from the idea of a court. Having in mind the extensive practice of commercial arbitration at domestic and international levels, this might not look worrisome at first glance. Arbitration is provided for by most legal systems in the world as an alternative to court proceedings on

---

74 There is nothing in international investment law that prohibits the inclusion of some sort of local remedies rule, as for example specifically mentioned in Art. 26 ICSID Convention, supra note 6. There is a variety of different forms to ensure that domestic courts address a dispute first, for example: cooling-off periods which force the investor to wait a certain amount of time before raising an investment claim, for example provided in Art. 24 USA Model BIT, supra note 56; fork-in-the-road provisions which allow an investor to raise either an investment claim or a lawsuit before a domestic court, for example provided Agreement Between the Government of the Hellenic Republic and the Government of the Republic of Albania for the Encouragement and Reciprocal Protection of Investments, 1 August 1991, Greece and Albania, Art. 10 (2), available at http://investmentpolicyhub.unctad.org/Download/TreatyFile15 (last visited 13 December 2018); and classic local remedies-rules which demand from the investor to bring a dispute to domestic courts before resorting to investment arbitration, for example provided in Treaty Between the Federal Republic of Germany and the Argentine Republic on the Encouragement and Reciprocal Protection of Investments, 9 April 1991, Germany and Argentina, Art. 10 (2) and (3) lit. a, available at http://www.wipo.int/edocs/lexdocs/treaties/en/ar-de/trt_ar_de.pdf (last visited 13 December 2018) which however allows for the filing of an investment claim if the competent domestic court does not issue a decision on the merits within 18 months of the initiation of domestic proceedings. See generally on these different clauses Aaken, supra note 66, 739-743.

75 ECHR, supra note 73, Art. 19-23.

the understanding, that it deals with disputes among private parties involving their private interest and that it is based on a consensus between those parties.
Investor-State dispute settlement has been intentionally tailored along the lines of the well-established forms of international commercial arbitration.\textsuperscript{77} And indeed, some observers did conclude, that arbitration can make an investor-State-dispute look like or even transform it into a matter of private law with the aim of \textit{depoliticizing} the matter at hand.\textsuperscript{78}

It took some time for the view to emerge, that investor-State disputes are about individual rights as affected by the exercise of public authority and that, accordingly, public interest is involved in settlement.\textsuperscript{79} This having said, the disputing party’s \textit{ad hoc} choice of arbitrators appears to be questionable in terms of legitimacy. There is quite some constitutional law reason to believe, that the public rather than individual disputing parties should have a say in selecting individuals to sit on a case involving public interest. For instance, this point has been made under the German Constitution and in view of its Art. 92 – \textit{(Gesetzlicher Richter)} and Art. 20 para. 3 – the rule of law principle.\textsuperscript{80} This is an essential point in the upcoming criticism about investor-State arbitration and the main concern, which drives the proposal for an international investment court, where individuals to sit on a case will be picked from a list as initially set up by States parties. More generally, this issue clearly indicates, that the rule of law also has a legitimacy dimension.\textsuperscript{81}

3. Discrimination

Another tension might occur, where the protection of foreign investors, a welcome achievement of the international rule of law, works to the disadvantage of domestic investors and raises questions as to discrimination and the domestic rule of law. International investment law initially has been developed to remedy a lack of effective protection for foreign investors. Probably in order to accommodate sovereignty concerns, this law never touched upon economic rights more generally at national level. In the situation of questionable

\textsuperscript{77} Z. Douglas, ‘The Hybrid Foundations of Investment Treaty Arbitration’, \textit{74 British Yearbook of International Law} (2004) 1, 151, 224.

\textsuperscript{78} See for example I. F. I. Shihata, ‘Towards A Greater Depoliticization of Investment Disputes: The Roles of ICSID and MIGA’, \textit{1 ICSID Review} (1986) 1, 1, 3-12, 24-25.

\textsuperscript{79} Van Harten, \textit{supra} note 63, 54-58, 96-99.

\textsuperscript{80} Stoll, Holterhus & Gött, \textit{supra} note 18, 139-143.

\textsuperscript{81} In this vein already van Harten, \textit{supra} note 63, 167-175; on German constitutional law in this regard see Stoll, Holterhus & Gött, \textit{supra} note 18, 151-154.
levels of protection of foreigners, this worked well. However, in a domestic legal environment, where foreign and domestic investors enjoy effective protection, the additional international protection of foreign investors may cause discrimination. The existence and extent of such discrimination very likely depends on the level of protection afforded by applicable international investment law as compared to the level of domestic protection. Many observers understand the level of substantive protection in most industrialized countries to easily exceed international investment law standards. Whether this general statement stands a reality test in a given case, where complex legislation and adjudication meets the rather general terms of international investment law and the considerable variety of arbitral awards is an open question, particular when looking at details, such as the amount of compensation and its calculation.

When turning to the procedural side, the divergences become more obvious, as the international investor-State dispute settlement – a one-tier arbitration, which can be done in quite a short time stands against possibly lengthy litigation before a hierarchy of different courts at domestic level. Modern BITs or investment chapters put sophisticated conditions for the use of these two tracks alternatively or in sequence and prescribe certain conditions in order to prevent the parallel use of the two tracks and to give incentives to go to domestic courts first. With all these complex regulations in mind, however, it is fair to resume, that a foreign investor enjoys more procedural options to remedy a measure by the host State as compared to a national.

In sum, it can be concluded, that international investment law may result in a discrimination of national investors at domestic levels. Certainly, the legality of such discrimination under domestic, regional and international law depends on applicable standards of non-discrimination and potential justifications. It is sufficient to conclude here, that discrimination might occur. Such discrimination may very well be a concern in view of the rule of law. This is so, because the rule of law can be understood to embrace the principle of non-discrimination as a separate element or as part of human rights more generally.

82 For a more detailed analysis see Stoll, Holterhus & Gött, supra note 18, 135-136.
84 See, for instance US Model BIT, supra note 56, Art. 24; Canada Model BIT, supra note 56, Art. 26; CETA, supra note 10, Art. 8.22.
4. An Utopian Proposal: Establishing a Global Human Right to Property

In overview, international investment law may look as an important but yet insufficient step forward to promote the international rule of law. It suffers from its focus on protecting foreigners only, which roots back to the ancient international law of aliens and diplomatic protection but possibly results in a discrimination of domestic investors. It also suffers from employing arbitration as a dispute settlement mechanism, which, as has been seen, does not fully correspond to needs of legitimation.

Yet investment law importantly and effectively protects individuals and in this way comes close to the idea of human rights. At this point, it is worth recalling, that a human right to property has been part of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights but still today is only provided for at regional level.\footnote{Additional Protocol I to the ECHR, 20 March 1952, Art. 1, ETS 9, 1; American Convention on Human Rights, 22 November 1969, Art. 21, 1144 UNTS 123, 150; African Charter on Human and Peoples’ Rights, 27 June 1981, Art. 14, 1520 UNTS 217, 248.}

A human right to property could remedy the shortcomings of the investment law system. It would protect foreign and domestic investors alike and this way benefit social and economic development and prevent discrimination. It could come along with a human rights court-type dispute settlement and enforcement including compensation easing the legitimacy concerns of investment arbitration. Establishing such a right at global level indeed could be seen as the missing mile to go, to fully transform a useful but unsatisfactory legal construct, to present needs and realities of the global economy and human rights development.\footnote{On the global right to property see, for instance J. G. Sprankling, ‘The Global Right to Property’, 52 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law (2014) 2, 464, 465, 486, 504-505.} Of course, there have been reasons for not embodying a right to property in the global human rights rulebook to date and such reasons are likely to prevail. Thus, there is need to keep and further refine international investment law. However, this should not be used as an excuse to not to call for the elaboration of a human right to property. Such right to property could not only cure some of the deficits of investment law. It is also called for to complete the global human rights rulebook. Investment law and such human right to property could even be mutually supportive. A human right to property could take the lead, where it has been established and implemented effectively by a State Party. Otherwise, investment law would come to bearing. Its application would be particularly well acceptable from the point of the rule of law, if it is shown, that more appropriate forms of protection have failed to be effectively established.

Thus, the protection of property as a human right at global level could be linked to the existing system of international investment law: the application of international investment law with all its merits and shortcomings could be confined to cases, where States fail to agree on or the to properly implement a global human right to property. This way, an incentive would be created for States to accept and implement such a proposed human right to property. Where they fail to do so, the application of international investment law would look particularly well founded.

D. Three Perspectives on the Rule of Law

The above discussion of international investment law invites a more general reflection on the rule of law, the way it is understood and its conceptual underpinnings. As particularly the discussion of international investment law indicates, the rule of law is used in different ways.

I. The Rule of Law as an Empirical Indicator

Firstly, from a business perspective, but also with regard to the political, economic and social situation of certain countries, the rule of law is referred to as an empirical indicator, which allows for comparing and even for ranking particular countries. A number of rule of law indices exist, including in publications of the World Bank or other entities and foundations.87 They are mostly created by way of expert interviews and therefore reflect the personal opinion of a number of selected individuals rather than the result of an institutional or legal analysis. Those indices might be helpful as an orientation for businesses and for general policy-making. They are even welcome in providing us with an overall picture. However, it has to be kept in mind that such quantitative indicators do not build on, and do not reflect, a more detailed legal reasoning or normative judgement.

II. The Rule of Law as Lege Lata

Much to the contrary, we can – secondly – speak about the rule of law as part of applicable law – as lege lata. There is good reason to believe, that the rule of law, in spite of the rather general and abstract nature of the term, indeed forms part of the international and domestic legal orders as a general principle, from which even more specific rules and principles could be derived. Seen in this way, the rule of law has to be taken into account in legal analysis as applicable law.

Yet, while several substantive elements of international investment law such as the fair and equitable treatment standard as well as procedural issues such as the extended use of the annulment procedure suggest themselves as a manifestation of the rule of law principle, the principle is hardly ever applied in case law, treaty practice or more general reflections on the state of international investment law. Very likely, rather than directly and explicitly referring to the principle as such, positive rules, which reflect it, such as the aforementioned fair and equitable treatment standard or legal arguments based on certain elements of the rule of law such as the bona fide principle, have been employed. Where no positive rules or principles are at hand, however, the rule of law can come into play. Applying it in a given case would, however, require one to explore its legal foundations and meaning, which probably is a difficult and burdensome task.

III. The Rule of Law as an Analytical Concept

It has not been intended in this paper, the extensively explore the impact of the rule of law as lege lata. Rather, the paper has been concerned with international investment law with the aim to explain its developments and challenges in international and domestic dimensions and to draw some conclusions de lege ferenda. Accordingly, it was meant to make use of the rule of law in a third sense, which may be described as a conceptual approach. Rather than striving for ascertaining the legal validity of the rule of law as a principle in some circumstance and spelling out its significance in the context of specific legal questions, it has been used as a normative orientation to analyse, compare and categorize and discuss legal developments. This approach builds on the understanding, that the rule of law can be seen as a useful concept for legal analysis, which goes far beyond its manifest positive legal significance. Such conceptual use of the term is driven by the purposes of legal analysis and has to conform to its rationale. Concepts need to adequately respond to research questions and purposes, be based on clear terminology, and be applied consistently.

E. Conclusion

The above discussion has manifested what was observed at the outset: investment law appeals to the lawyer’s senses for the rule of law. Indeed, the concept of the rule of law brings together several pertinent issues, highlights interlinkages and thus provides us with a clearer picture of this particular, sometimes even peculiar part of international law. It has become clear, that a rule of law view on investment law must consider, that this law does not only contribute to, but might also be informed by the rule of law. It also turned out, that a dividing line has to be drawn between international and domestic levels, not so much in view of concepts but because conflicts may arise in the course of operation of the rule of law at different levels. Altogether, the rule of law concept will become significantly more relevant for the development of a part of international law, which emerged as some sort of a provisional fix for an economic problem and now has become a firm element of the international legal order. In substance, it has been proposed to establish a global human right to property to cure various shortcomings of international investment law. Such a human right could coexist and even be linked to international investment law in that the latter would apply only where the former has not been accepted and properly implemented.